I'm not a great dancer by most anyones standards, and I've never thought at any point in my life that I was. Even in 5th grade when my school was having an open call for the school talent show try outs, I knew then that I was not a good dancer.

But the night before those try outs, I forgot all that. With some crazy unfounded sense of confidence, I choreographed a solo performance to the song, "Point Of No Return," by Kansas. It had spins and back bends and all the crazy moves that you just don't do if you're not a good dancer. Especially for a contest. I practiced for a while, maybe an hour or so, and I felt like I had the routine down so I set in on detailing my costume. White turtle neck, red and white paneled Dolphin shorts, white socks to the knee and white nylon Nikes with a red swoosh. I remember thinking, "I like my style." and when I got into bed for the night, I felt really good. Not only about the try outs for the show, but maybe even winning the entire show... pretty positive for someone that can't dance.

Morning came and that random confidence had not wavered. I was ready to dance. All through school that day, I didn't tell anyone I was trying out, I wanted to surprise my teachers and my friends. I felt excited and not at all anxious. When school ended, I got my bag, my brother's Kansas album and headed for the auditorium to change and take the stage. There were 6 acts before me and maybe 6 or 7 after. When everyone had performed, the teachers told us all how great we were and how proud they were of not only our talent, but our participation in extra curricular activities at the school. The teachers and administrators then ran through the format of how the show would work, when we would rehearse, and when to meet again. As the teacher explained that each family would be limited to 5 tickets, I wondered who in my family would have to miss the show. I was so excited to get home and tell everyone.

As I walked over to get my bag, one of the teachers summoned me back. She had a really sad look on her face, almost as if she was in pain. I went back over to her and the other administrators, and they all talked about how "great that dance would be if it were more polished" and how "brave and sure" I looked while I danced. They kept giving me compliments and then taking them back. When they finally realized I was getting what they were saying, that I was not being chosen for the talent show, one of them got really blunt and just said, "you're not prepared for this years show, but..."

I couldn't believe it. I was the only talent that was not fit for the show. I fought back tears for as long as I could and then just let them run down my face. I walked to get my bag and got out of there as fast as possible. I cried all the way home, embarrassed and disappointed. When I got home, my mom came to the door with that same sort of sad, pitiful, look on her face that the teachers had.

"Did they tell you?" I cried.

"No honey, tell me what happened."

That's how bad it was! The school hadn't even called her! The routine was so bad and she was familiar enough with my dance skills — or rather, my lack of — to put the pieces together and know there was no chance of me dancing in a talent show. My mom said a lot of the same sorts of things the teachers had said but she came right out and asked me if I thought I was a good dancer, and she also threw in a, "what were you thinking?"

"I don't know what I was thinking, I really don't." That was the truth, the disillusion that had set in the night before had come out of no where. I really couldn't answer her. Finally, she said, "Well, regardless of being in the show or not, I like that daring girl that wasn't afraid to dance alone." I was starting to feel that weird sureness again when my 20 year-old brother got up off the couch and said, "Mom, you might like that daring girl dancing all alone, but she fucking scares me, and I want her to stay out of my album collection."

THE CHOCOLATE QUIZ

A lot of folks might think that being elevated to professional status is solely based on paying dues on the board. Over here at Chocolate, we've ditched the contest winnings, video coverage, and exposure meters for a more scholastic approach. The Chocolate Quiz. Sure Dev and Justine can ride, but more importantly, do they know who draws Chocolate's graphics or who on the team would most likely to part the Awesome Blossom? Lucky for these young men that we grade on The Bell Curve - because they just barely passed.

Who on the team would most likely pronounce Chocolate as "Chidocks?"

- a) Scott Johnston
- b) Kenny Anderson
- c) Chico Brenes ✓
- d) Marc Johnson

As far as stature is concerned, who was Chocolate's heaviest hitter?
